6. SIPI has no control over your “@usc.edu” email account. Once you leave USC the University may terminate the account at any time with little or no warning. Do not assume that it will remain active for some set length of time after you have left. Even if you are still collaborating with a professor on a research topic, once you are no longer a student or an employee, the account is liable to be closed and it may be impossible to recover any messages. Make sure you have all your important email transferred to some other email account or achieved in some way before you leave.

7. Join the USC Alumni Association (http://alumni.usc.edu) and receive email forwarding in addition to other benefits.

8. Copy any computer files on department servers that you want saved to some other system or to removable media. Computer accounts are normally closed within a few months of graduating. The same applies to any files left on desktop systems in student offices. The next person to occupy the desk may erase everything on the system in order to use it.

9. Return any equipment/computers issued to you to your professor.

10. Make sure all reimbursements due have been turned in.

12. If you are leaving mid-semester, you must submit a letter of resignation to your professor with a copy to Gloria. An email is sufficient. Please try and resign at the end of the month or 15th. Example:

    Dear Professor X,

    I am writing to inform you of my resignation as a Research Assistant with your research group. I have defended and have accepted a position at XXX. My last day at USC will be date.

    Thank you for everything.
